

ABSTRACT

A computer program product includes program code which provides, when executed on a computer system, an interface between a calling application and at least one callable application. The program code represents a computer program which implements at least two controllers which cooperate with each other and are at different hierarchical levels. The controllers are instances of a generic controller. The callable application may be a transaction-tax service application.